

A TRADITION BEGAN

With the birth of an NFL franchise in 1976, Seattle fans were no longer starved for their very own professional football team. As the Seahawks strengthened their young franchise, they were supported by their fans, soon to become known as the 12th Man. Over the years, in the Northwest, the number 12 became synonymous with Seahawks fans. From 1977-1982, backup quarterback Sam Adkins wore the number 12. Aside from Adkins, Jim Zorn is the only other Seahawks player to have ever worn the number. Zorn borrowed Adkins' jersey during a portion of a game versus San Diego in 1981, after his jersey was ripped. Seattle fans became so significant in the success of the team in the 1980's that former Seahawks President Mike McCormack decided to retire the number 12 on December 15, 1984, versus the Denver Broncos.

Throughout the 1980's Seattle's fans became known as the loudest in the NFL, so much so that the league instituted a noise rule in 1985. On December 26, 1999, versus Kansas City, a fan donning number 12 ceremonially turned out the lights to the Kingdome after the last regular season game played in building. Earlier that season versus the Raiders, Seattle's 12th Man set an attendance record for the Kingdome with 66,400.

A TRADITION CONTINUES...

In 2003, the 12th Man was honored once again, this time with a flag. The tradition of the 12th Man Flag began October 12, 2003, when 12 original season ticket holders hoisted the flag versus the San Francisco 49ers. Now, at every home game just before kickoff, the flag is raised in honor of the 12th Man. From former Seahawks greats, to local celebrities and sports personalities, being called upon to raise the flag has become an honor within itself. The flag has become a symbol of Seahawks supporters all over the Northwest and the spirit of community that the organization and fans share.

12th MAN MAKES A DIFFERENCE

In 2005, the 12th Man played their part in helping the Seahawks climb to their first-ever conference title. On November 27 versus the N.Y. Giants, fans helped contribute to 11 false start penalties. That performance by the 12th Man prompted Mike Holmgren to give the game ball to the fans the following day. It was painted and now resides on the club level.
